

Head spinning

Once upon a time when my younger brother and I were kids, we would plan to fall sick together to skip school. We were in the middle of reading an exciting hardy boys novel. Instead of another boring day at school, we could huddle up in our make believe hut in the terrace and read how it ends. We knew the only way to stay away from school was to fall sick. That morning, we got dressed (to create that illusion of sincerity, you should have seen our faces!) and told mom that we so want to go to school but we were unwell.

Mom saw through our silly plan. But she decided to play with us a little. She can be a pain like that sometimes. "Oho my poor babies. What happened?".

Some back story. My brother and I grew up around my mom's sisters. and they always got a day off when they self diagnosed "head is spinning" because of weakness. I had no clue at that time that it was periods. and thought that if it works for them, it should work for us.

So as per our rehearsal the previous night, we said "head is spinning" in unison. We were both smiling inside thinking of the geniuses we were and how simple it is. All the future "sick" days and playing while others suffered through school.

Mom looked at our sad faces for a moment. Smiled like a detective has caught the thief red handed. But she still needed hard evidence and asked "how is your head spinning, is it very bad? show me?"

Like two ballerinas, we both started moving our head in circles and spinning it slowly to show mom □□□♂. To make things worse, my brother kept looking at me to make sure that he was spinning his head in the right direction.

Needless to say, we got a thorough "treatment" for our failed master plan.

Revision #2

Created 31 March 2024 06:37:35 by folktaler

Updated 31 March 2024 06:53:02 by folktaler